ABOUT ME.

I'm Atakan Deveci, a self-taught designer based in Austria.

My work combines graphic design, fashion and art direction with a focus on typography, illustration and photography.

I explore different visual approaches to develop distinctive concepts tailored to each project.

In 2022, I founded TEPHAYA, an independent fashion label for which I oversee the creative direction, including graphic design, visual campaigns, photography and product development.

This portfolio presents a selection of my creative work from 2020 to 2026.

AFTER HOURS

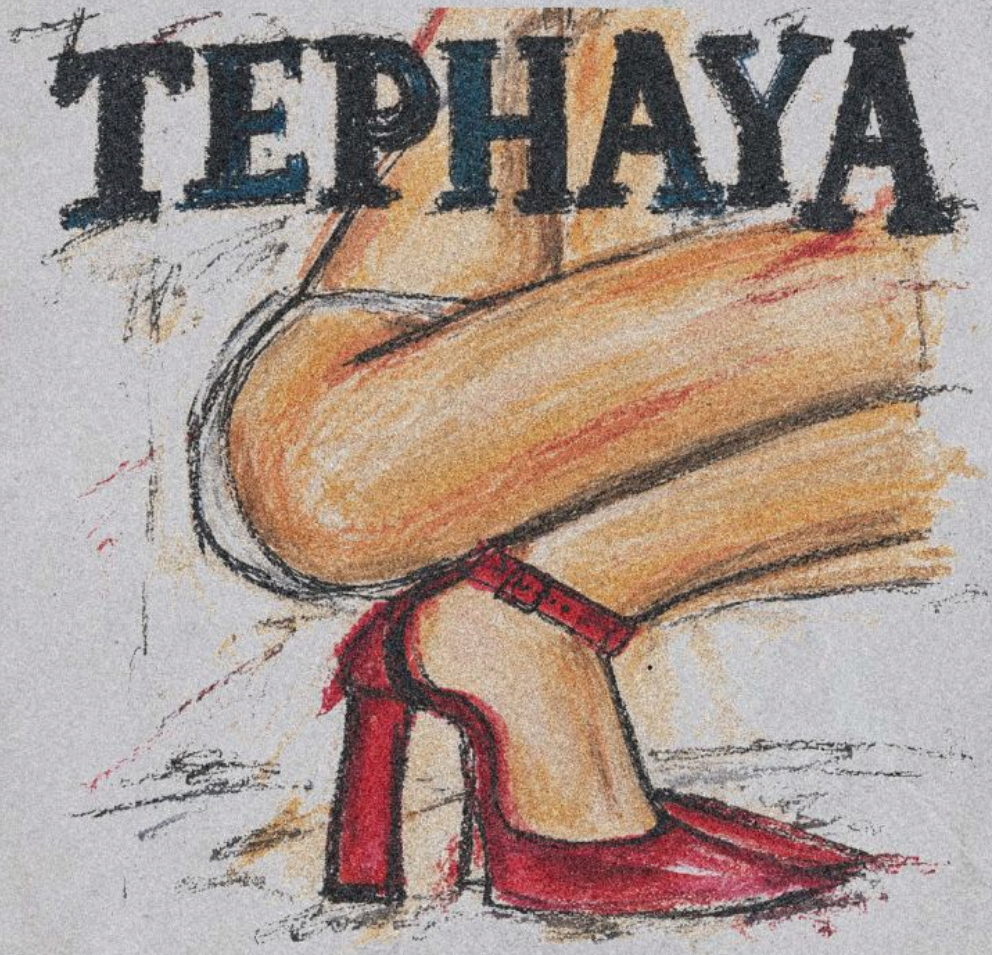

Inspired by the visual language of vintage Playboy magazines, After Hours explores the relationship between provocation, femininity and graphic design.

The intention was to create something provocative yet visually appealing, combining sensual imagery with a raw, hand-drawn aesthetic.

The composition contrasts the elegance of red high heels with rough pencil textures, expressive lines and bold typography.

INSPIRATION

THE EVOLUTION OF TEPHAYA TIMES

What started in 2022 as a simple typography-based newspaper concept evolved into a more complex editorial design.

Over the years, I developed a stronger understanding of composition, typography, visual hierarchy and storytelling.

Revisiting the original concept allowed me to reinterpret it through the skills and creative perspective I've developed since then.

NEVER MET

A simple and familiar object, the cereal bowl, is used to express a complicated emotion.

The bright, childlike visuals represent nostalgia, love and the innocence of the beginning.

The message "I wish we never met" reveals the bitter side of that feeling - loving someone so deeply that it would have been easier if you never crossed paths.

EITHER ON OR OFF THE DRUGS

Inspired by a JPEGMAFIA song and surreal CD artwork, this piece explores addiction as a way of escaping reality.

The concept draws from personal observations of friends struggling with substance abuse, using art to visualize the constant need to be under the influence just to cope with everyday life.

The distorted screaming face and colorful pills create a contrast between the temporary escape drugs promise and the suffering hidden beneath.

GRAPHICS ON GARMENTS

LICENSE OF TRAVEL

this one took off !

Inspired by the visual language of fictional identification documents, LICENSE OF TRAVEL combines official-looking typography with exaggerated character illustration.

The design contrasts the structured appearance of a travel document with distorted facial features, rough textures and playful details.

Created for TEPHAYA, the piece became one of the brand's bestselling designs.

SELF-PORTRAIT

This self-portrait is a playful and exaggerated interpretation of myself, combining cartoon illustration with personal expression.

The oversized smile, silver grills, pink eyelids and rough, hand-drawn textures create a character that reflects my sense of humor and visual style.

Paired with the statement "The world is soo lucky to have me", the illustration explores confidence, self-irony and the idea of not taking yourself too seriously.

OPEN THE GATES

OPEN THE GATES was created as a graphic for a zip-up hoodie, turning a functional detail into part of the design itself.

The concept is simple: as the zipper opens, the gates to paradise symbolically open with it.

Soft clouds, glowing light and a dreamy airbrush aesthetic create a heavenly atmosphere, combining nostalgic imagery with an interactive garment concept.

DIGITAL NOSTALGIA

Inspired by the chaotic visual culture of early 2000s MySpace pages, this piece embraces low-resolution imagery, rough cutouts and intentionally unpolished design.

Instead of following modern standards of clean digital aesthetics, the concept celebrates the imperfections of early internet graphics.

The simple addition of the TEPHAYA website turns a nostalgic, amateur-looking image into an unconventional piece of brand promotion.

MOTION STUDY

This piece explores movement, repetition and the way digital manipulation can transform a still photograph into something that feels alive.

By layering motion blur and repeated exposures, I wanted to create a sense of restlessness and tension while keeping the subject at the center of the composition.

The contrast between the still body and the distorted face captures a moment somewhere between focus and losing control.

SOMEWHERE BETWEEN FOCUS AND LOSING CONTROL

HIDDEN IN PLAIN SIGHT

Inspired by Drake's Habibti cover artwork, this piece explores the idea of hiding something while leaving just enough visible to create curiosity.

By covering almost the entire portrait with layers of aged tape and paper, I wanted to shift the focus entirely to the eyes.

The rough textures, muted colors and minimal composition create a sense of mystery, showing how removing visual information can sometimes make an image more powerful.

SIGNAL LOST

Inspired by the raw visual language of old television screens, underground music videos and early digital graphics, SIGNAL LOST explores the relationship between photography and digital distortion.

The original portraits were transformed through heavy red color grading, strong contrasts, scanlines and rough pixel textures. The intention was to make the images feel like frames captured from a damaged screen rather than traditional photographs.

The repetition of faces along the bottom creates a sense of rhythm and visual noise, while the oversized portrait remains the main focus. The result is a deliberately imperfect composition that combines music culture, digital experimentation and editorial design.

you can distort the image, not the legacy

2026 PORTF.

This piece is a visual exploration of modern portrait aesthetics, combining photography, typography and subtle manipulation.

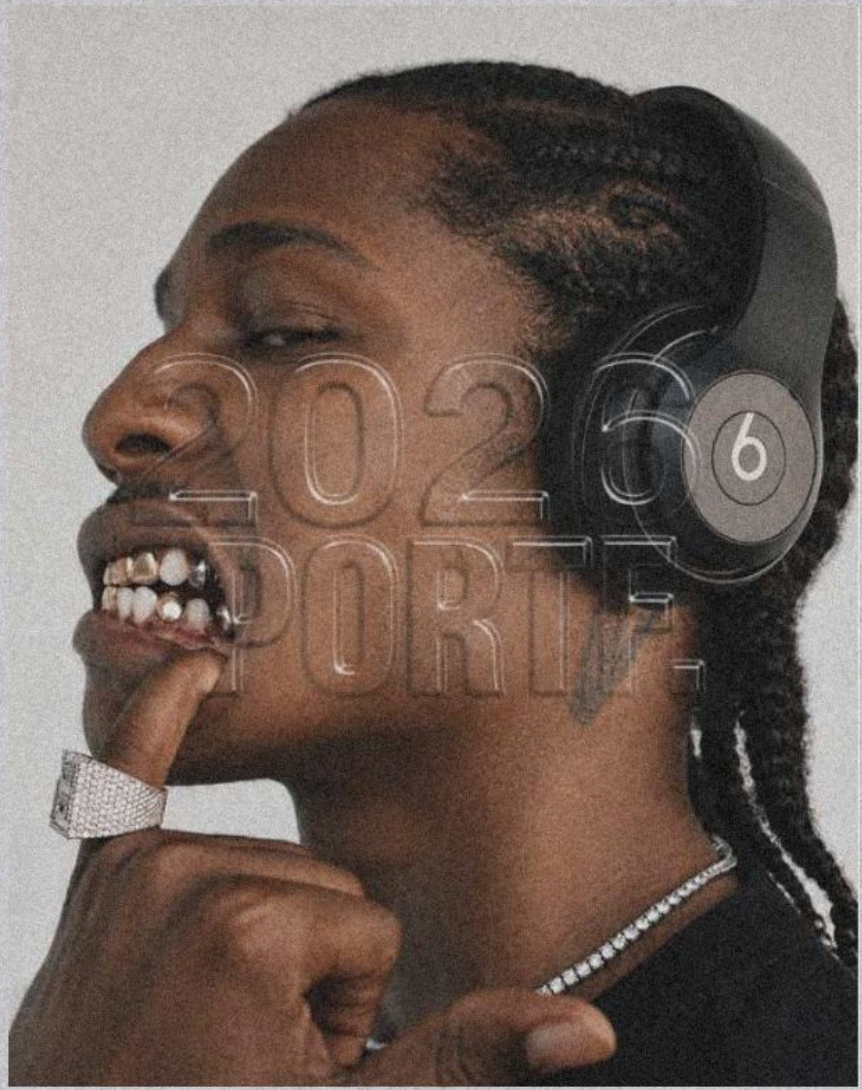

The goal was to create a clean yet striking composition that feels current and timeless, using the transparent typography to add depth without taking away from the subject.

I was inspired by contemporary music and fashion culture, where strong portraits and simple graphic elements create a powerful visual statement.

ISSUE 01

I wanted to explore what TEPHAYA could look like beyond clothing, imagining the brand as an independent fashion and culture publication.

Inspired by vintage magazine covers and experimental editorial design, I combined bold typography, repeated branding and colorful graphic elements with a deliberately worn, imperfect finish.

The idea was to create something that feels both familiar and unconventional - a magazine cover that carries the identity of TEPHAYA without looking like a traditional fashion advertisement.

A TEPHAYA campaign combining streetwear imagery with a surveillance-inspired visual language. Nine everyday moments are transformed into a fictional CCTV sequence through framing, grain and digital editing.

THE DROP

Inspired by Kanye West's unconventional approach to fashion campaigns, this project explores the connection between streetwear, music culture and raw photography.

The entire shoot was captured on an old Nokia phone, deliberately embracing low resolution, grain and the imperfections of early digital photography.

By arranging the TEPHAYA pieces around the model, I wanted to turn a simple product presentation into something more expressive. The unusual perspective, repetition and unpolished aesthetic give the campaign its own character without relying on professional camera equipment.

POP UP 2026

CHROME EXPERIMENTS

Created as a promotional visual for TEPHAYA's planned pop-up event in Salzburg, this project explores experimental typography through distorted letterforms, metallic textures and exaggerated proportions.

Inspired by early 2000s digital aesthetics and futuristic graphic design, I wanted to create something that feels both nostalgic and ahead of its time. The reflective surfaces, stretched typography and symmetrical composition turn the lettering itself into the main visual element.

a little too futuristic for 2026?

LOGO STUDIES

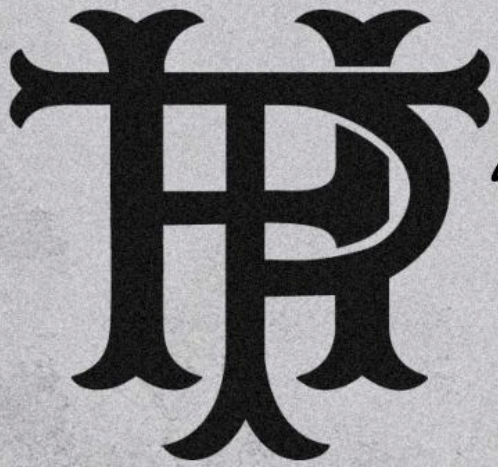

A collection of logo studies exploring different approaches to typography, monograms and visual identity.

From expressive Blackletter lettering for TEPHAYA to intertwined initials and ornamental compositions, each design explores a different visual direction. The focus is on creating distinctive forms through typography, symmetry and experimentation.
