THE DROP

Inspired by Kanye West's unconventional approach to fashion campaigns, this project explores the connection between streetwear, music culture and raw photography.

The entire shoot was captured on an old Nokia phone, deliberately embracing low resolution, grain and the imperfections of early digital photography.

By arranging the TEPHAYA pieces around the model, I wanted to turn a simple product presentation into something more expressive. The unusual perspective, repetition and unpolished aesthetic give the campaign its own character without relying on professional camera equipment.
