MOTION STUDY

This piece explores movement, repetition and the way digital manipulation can transform a still photograph into something that feels alive.

By layering motion blur and repeated exposures, I wanted to create a sense of restlessness and tension while keeping the subject at the center of the composition.

The contrast between the still body and the distorted face captures a moment somewhere between focus and losing control.

SOMEWHERE BETWEEN FOCUS AND LOSING CONTROL